

Today's post is brought to you by a lovely Twist reader and prolific knitter! Jessica Ewing is from Pasadena, CA. She is the mother of a little girl and wife of a camera operator. When not working at an Arts School in Downtown Los Angeles, she is knitting, sewing, taking ballet classes, and sampling her husband's handiwork. She is also a volunteer at a living history museum specializing in late Victorian Los Angeles. You can find her amazing work on Ravelry here. In addition to the projects you'll see below, she's knitted this one and this one, and has four Twist WIPs. We love you too, Jessica.

My first Twist pattern was the ever popular Audrey in Unst. It introduced me to the creative ways

Twist designers adapt classic silhouettes using new (at least to me) techniques. This was the first time I used a short row set in sleeve and it is an amazing technique for adding sleeves without the seams.

Probably my favorite pattern to make was Oscillate. I typically avoid patterns with cabling, but it was my all time favorite type of garment to wear and a perfect fit for alpaca yarns, so I threw my fears out and dug into this wonderful pattern. What a wonderful reward it was; so soft and so perfect to wear with a wide range of outfits.

The most worn Twist pattern in my collection is hands down my Blair. It was the pattern that got me hooked on two addictions. Twist patterns and Madelinetosh yarn. That shawl collar, the rich plum color, it all just mixed together for the perfect combination on a cool evening. It gets worn multiple times a week in the winter and I hope that never changes.

Right now I'm finishing up a Regent and I can hardly wait to snuggle deep into its warmth this winter...should winter ever choose to appear here.

(this one is Greenaway- plus a bonus fuzzface!!)
